In the end, Cinderella and the prince live happily in the castle together. However, the two daughters of the stepmother are jealous of Cinderella so they decide to kill her secretly.

At one night, the two daughters enter the castle quietly when the security guards are changing shifts. Then, they lurk into the room of Cinderella and the prince. They use two wires to open the locked door. They tiptoe towards the bed and take out their knives slowly. However, one of the daughters hit the leg of the bed carelessly and thus wake the prince. When another daughter is ready to kill Cinderella, the prince protects her with his body. Cinderella wake at this moment and scream loudly. The security guards come immediately and subdue the two daughters. Unfortunately, the prince die because of the excessive loss of blood.

After a long period of time, Cinderella still cannot walk out of the sadness and she miss the prince so much. Therefore, she goes to her mother's grave and tries to find the wishing bird that helped her before. Luckily, she finds it. However, the bird says that even if it could resurrect the prince, he would forget everything including her. "It doesn't matter. I only want him to be alive again!" Cinderella cries.

Finally, the prince reborns but he really forgets Cinderella. She tries different methods to recall his memories everyday, but still they are all useless. Nevertheless, she doesn't give up. She thinks of the last method which is the glass slippers. She takes it out and let the prince to see. Fortuitously, the prince recognises the shoes and remembers all the things. He hugs Cinderella tightly. At the end, they live happily together again.
